London, June 7.

Yesterday arrived a Mail from France.

Stockholm, May 2, O. S.

THE Queen of Sweden is not yet so perfectly recovered of her late indisposition as to appear in Publick. On the 24th of last Month in the Evening, there happened a Rencontre at Count Freytag's Assembly, which is much taken Notice of, and has been ever since the whole Discourse of this Town. The Day after, that Minister presented a Memorial about it to the King of Sweden, and gave Copies of it since to all the foreign Ministers. On the 26th he took an Opportunity to talk something more particular about the Affair to the King himself, when his Majesty told him, That as he had a sincere Friendship for the Emperor, as well as a particular Esteem for the Count himself, his Majesty had already given Orders to examine thoroughly into the Matter, and he might depend on all just and reasonable Satisfaction. Nevertheless, the Count still proceeded to exaggerate Major General Swerin's Misbehaviour, and went even so far as to tell the King, "That if he presumed to come again into his House, he would cause him to be thrown out of the Windows;" which Expression the King was very justly much offended at; Count Freytag was also soon sensible of his Error, and went the same Afternoon to inform Count Horn, "That as he had chanced to let slip an Expression which he apprehended the King might take amiss, he therefore prayed the Count to assure his Majesty of his Sorrow for it, and desired it might be forgot." But upon the King's acquainting the Senate next Day with what that Minister took the Liberty to say, an Express was the Morning after dispatched to the Court of Vienna to complain of his Conduct; and the same Day, the Count sent likewise a Courier thither. In the mean time, he declines going to Court, and as he says by Count Horn's Advice. It is universally known that Count Freytag communicated his Memorial to all the Foreign Ministers; and in like Manner, Major General Swerin has sent them Copies of a Petition which he has given to the King, together with another Relation of the whole Affair, whereby he endeavours to refute every thing alledged by Count Freytag; but in the first Place, here follows a Translation of the Memorial presented to the King of Sweden by the Imperial Esoroy Count Freytag the 25th of April 1722, O. S.

Pro Memoria.

THE underwritten Minister having hitherto received no Satisfaction upon the respectful Complaint which he lately made about the Soldiers of the Guard having violated the Immunity of his House, it is therefore not without a very sensible Concern that he finds himself again under an indispensable Necessity of incommoding your Majesty about an Affair that happened last Night.

The underwritten having usually some Company that meet at his House every Tuesday and Thursday, Major General Swerin came also thither Yesterday in the Evening very much overcharged with Wine, and in the Presence of several Ladies both of the Court and Town, as also sundry Gentlemen, and amongst these, Admiral Taube, Marshal Aldersfelt, the Colonels Reichel, Doring, Bodenbrook, and Stahl, Cammer-herr, Sack, and Major Stakelberg, he began very warmly to expostulate with Adjutant General Antoyre, and without the least Provocation then given, treated him so rudely, that the latter not to be wanting in the Respect due to the Ladies, nor in the Compliance owing to any private Person, much more to a Minister, found himself obliged to retire from thence with the said Major-General. But the underwritten being then engaged at Play, and sitting at some Distance, was not so soon aware of what had passed till they were both gone, and, as he suspected, with a Design to explain themselves in another Manner; wherefore, to prevent the ill Consequences thereof, he caused a Servant to follow M. Antoyre and invite him to Supper, in Hopes the Major-General would afterwards have acknowledged that the Oversight he had been guilty of, proceeded from excess of Liquor, and consequently would not have had the Confidence to heighten his first Error by coming back and disturbing the Company anew.

But it falling contrarywise out, the underwritten could not forbear to resent the Disrespect shewn to the Company as well as to his House and Character; and therefore, he gave the Major-General publicly, yet civilly, to understand, "That he was not inclined to let out his House to him for a Place of Combat, and desired that he would both for the present and the future absent himself from it."

But it is probable, that after the cholerick Words he had with M. Antoyre, the Fumes of the Wine had so inflamed him that he was deprived of all Sense; seeing he not only answered the underwritten, but also his Spouse, who was likewise entreating him to retire, "That he came there as a Gentleman, and would wait to see who should force him to go away;" Whereupon the underwritten was induced to carry the Company into another Room; yet he thought fit at the same time to signify to the Major-General, "That by his Behaviour he had merited to be turn'd out of his House by the Footmen;" Although out of Respect to the Character where-with he has the Honour to be invested by your Majesty, the underwritten had never any Intention of doing it.

Yet the Major-General still obstinately persevering in his Resolution, the underwritten saw no other Expedient, than even so late last Night, humbly to beg effectual Assistance from your Majesty, which however the Major-General avoided, by retiring of his own Accord before the underwritten returned Home; though he first had the Presumption to place himself at Table with the rest of the Company.

Now this being all transacted from the Beginning to the End, in the Presence of the fore-mentioned Persons, and can be proved by them to have passed in the Manner as is here related.

Therefore your Royal Majesty, in your great Wisdom, and out of your natural Love of Justice, will your self best judge of the great Reason which the underwritten has to complain of this Injury and Misbehaviour; and accordingly will be pleased to inflict such a Punishment on the Major-General, as may not only serve for an Example to the like rash and inconsiderate Persons, but also be an actual Proof to the other Foreign Ministers here, that their Freedom and the Right of Nations is so inviolably maintained by your Majesty, that they may always firmly rely on your Royal Protection. In most humble Dependence thereon, the underwritten recommends himself with the deepest Submission to your Majesty's Royal Grace and Favour.

Liben,

Lisbon, May 7. On the 2d Instant, being the Birth-Day of the Prince Don Carlos, who then entered the 7th Year of his Age, the Nobility went to Court in their Habits of Ceremony, to congratulate the King on that Occasion, and were admitted to kiss his Majesty's Hand. The same Day the Court laid aside their Mourning for the Dutches of Zell, and resumed it the Day following.

Paris, June 13. The Maréchal de Villeroy has resigned his Seat in the Council of Trade, and the Duke de la Force is re-admitted. The Order of the Golden Elcece which the Emperour sent to Sig. Carlos Albani, the late Pope's Nephew, has not met with better Reception than the Order of the Holy Ghost which was sent him by the King; Sig. Albani having equally refused both those Orders. The Pope has sent a Brief to the Chevalier d'Orleans, permitting him the Possession of any kind of Benefice. In Consideration of the distinguished Merit and great Services of the Bailly de Langeron during the late Sickness in Marseilles, the King has made him a Lieutenant General, and granted him a Commission for the Government of that City. The Abbé de Rohan, who is appointed to the Archbishoprick of Rheims, arrived here the 6th Instant at Night; he went the next Day with his Uncle the Cardinal de Rohan to visit the King and the Duke of Orleans: Two Days afterwards, a Deputation of 20 Canons of the Cathedral of Rheims came hither to pay their Compliments to their new Archbishop. Certificates of Liquidation are fallen from 30 to 25 Livres, and the Actions are at 840.
